          Within the global spectrum, there are different spheres in which the re

        We firmly believe that there lies enormous potential for conflict resolution through unmediated dialogue and discussion, viewing it as a force to spread the profound possibility of global harmony. The conference is idealistic. This is what gives it its power. We aim to spark activism and initiative among youth.

        With enormous commitment, hard work and perseverance; with cooperation, collaboration and understanding; by recognizing the barriers and obstacles that lie ahead, yet not merely accepting them, peace can be a reality.

        During a three-day conference, 400 participants of over 105 nationalities, take part in a wide variety of engagements. Workshops led by youth, who have either experienced the absence of peace or with personal ties to various forms of conflict, offer unique insights and solution-based discussions. Peacemakers, challengers, advocates, and experts from around the world share their knowledge and inspire through lectures and lead debates. The intercultural evenings and performances add a sense of optimism and understanding, a sense of hope and purpose.

In my opinion peace doesn't mean absence of war. For me it's the absence of violence. Peace is an activity. It's a commitment that is practiced every day in all our interactions. Peace is a relationship of good living together, solid and sustainable based on respect, serenity, cordiality between all humans but also any form of life on earth. That is why I joined the International Peace conference, I wanted to propagate peace and no violence. Make the world a better place where everyone can live together and help each other.

<h1>Can Talu Mavioglu</h1>

<h3>TurkeyCommunications</h3>

If we try to find a definition for peace, we may be arguing for hours and never reach an agreement. But what would take us less than a second is to concur on what peace will never be: A Fighting. A war. A battle. A combat. Nevertheless, I come from a place where I have never seen an armed conflict, but that cannot be said to be in peace. I want to probe this apparent relativity of the concept of peace, while getting the opportunity to know other points of view; and I know IPC is the best place to do so.

<h1>Anne-Marie Gendron</h1>

<h3>CanadaLogistics, Finance</h3>

I perceive peace as an everlasting journey, as an ideal that we constantly need to strive for. Peace, for me, is about questioning our actions and our achievements in an attempt to create evolution in the world as we know it. I think that individuals like me, who are born with the privilege of not knowing war, have to acknowledge that they have a responsibility to aim and work for achieving equality, non-violence and respect. The absence of conflict might be utopian, but understanding each other's mindset and being capable of introspection is a meaningful step that we can all take. IPC 2020 is for me the occasion to put those ideas into action, for myself, for the community, and for the world.
